A review of the literature shows that companies operating in the EPZ in Bangladesh receive a number of advantages compared to companies outside the EPZ. For example, due to the fact that they can focus on the production of only the product that is necessary in this market, and not on the one that will be in demand in a few years. This makes it possible to create production in a short time to meet consumer demand. In addition, in Bangladesh, unlike India, there is the possibility of obtaining government subsidies and, as a result, reducing the cost of production.
